NOTES ON USE OF THE DIRECTORY

TYPES OF AGENCIES. The 280 agencies and their 268 field offices are divided into ten categories according to their geographic scope of operation and their authorization (public or private): federal, national private, territorial public, regional public and private, state public, state private, local public, local private, university centers, and Canadian private.

GEOGRAPHIC SCOPE. Division into national, regional, state and local categories has been determined almost entirely by the agencies' own definition and terminology. This is especially true of agencies' field offices and affiliates, information about which was obtained from the parent body.

CROSS REFERENCE. Included in the description of each federal and national agency is a list of its field offices and affiliates, with page references indicating where these offices have been entered. These references are simply page numbers in parentheses. Thus, under the national listing for the Anti-Defamation League, Michigan, Detroit (28) refers to that regional office's listing on page 28.

DUPLICATE LISTINGS. Regional offices with a scope of operation that seems limited to one state are marked by an asterisk (*) and appear again under the appropriate state heading. Thus, the *Michigan Regional Office of the Anti-Defamation League has a second listing on page 40, under State Private agencies.

SEQUENCE OF LISTINGS. National and federal agencies are listed alphabetically; regional offices alphabetically under regions; state public and state private agencies alphabetically, by states; local public and local private agencies alphabetically, by states and by cities; university centers and Canadian private agencies alphabetically.

REGIONAL BREAKDOWN (BY STATES). In determining regional groupings, the states have been divided arbitrarily into six major regions:

NORTHEAST	- Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire,
	New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island,
	Vermont

SOUTHEAST	Alabama,	Delaware,	District of C	Columbia, Florida,
	Georgia,	Kentucky,	Maryland, M	lississippi, North
	Carolina,	South Caro	lina, Tennesse	ee, Virginia, West Virginia

MIDWEST	 Colorado,	Illinois,	India	ana, Io	wa, Kans	as, Mic	higan,
	Minnesota	, Nebra	ıska,	North	Dakota,	Ohio,	South
	Dakota, V	Visconsir	1.

SOUTH CENTRAL — Arkansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Okla

NORTHWEST	— Alaska,	Idaho,	Montana,	Oregon,	Washington,
	Wyomin

SOUTHWEST		Arizona,	California,	Hawaii,	Nevada,	New	Mexico,

AGENCY INFORMATION. For each field office or affiliate of a larger agency, the Directory listing comprises the address and professional staff director only. Purpose and activities, publications, etc., may be found in the listing for the parent organization.

INTRODUCTION

The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) offers in this volume the first comprehensive directory of intergroup relations agencies published in eleven years. Since the publication in 1948 of the earlier listing, compiled by the American Council on Race Relations, there has been a constant demand for an up-to-date edition. This Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Professional Personnel has been prepared in response to that need and is presented to the field as a prime tool for developing the interagency and intraprofessional communication so essential to the advancement of more effective intergroup relations practice.

NAIRO'S decision to include in the present directory only those agencies with paid professional staff was reached after considerable experience with the 1948 listing; whether lack of paid personnel represents cause or effect, the fact remains that unstaffed agencies have had a higher mortality rate than those listed in this publication. And while many unstaffed agencies have existed for a number of years, communication with them has been, at best, difficult because of the lack of a permanent office address and changing volunteer leadership. It scarcely need be said that their exclusion from this listing in no way deprecates their significant and continuing contribution to the common cause.

In determining whether or not an organization warranted listing as an intergroup relations agency (or intergroup relations department within an organization of broader scope and purpose), the editors utilized a broad definition, leniently applied. Each agency was then given an opportunity to veto its inclusion, and some did. Those finally included can, in any event, be said to share an active concern with prejudice and discrimination against racial, religious and cultural minorities. Stated more positively, all are working through varying programs to secure equal opportunity and maximum dignity for all individuals.

Every effort has been made to insure that each listing would be correct and up-to-date. The necessary information was gathered from the individual agencies themselves and was re-checked in many instances; the final copy was then submitted to each agency for last-minute approval. Yet, even as the Directory rolls through the presses, personnel will change and offices will be relocated. It can only be said then that, as long as demand warrants, NAIRO will undertake an annual or at least biennial revision of this publication. Corrections and additions will be accepted gratefully in the meantime.

The field of intergroup relations has grown markedly since the publication of the earlier directory eleven years ago. Nothing could describe this more graphically than the article* from the Journal of Intergroup Relations published as an appendix to this volume. As the field has grown, so has the profession of intergroup relations. NAIRO, an infant in 1948, is today a thriving professional association that provides the major channel of interagency communication among some 1,400 practitioners and countless lay leaders. This directory is but one facet of a nationwide program to help these individuals develop techniques, methods and concepts that will permit them to function more effectively in an area of human relations that has never been more important.

Publication of the Directory would not have been possible without an outstanding contribution of time and talent by three individuals: Dr. Helen E. Amerman, Oakland (Calif.) Redevelopment Agency, who compiled the exhaustive list of agencies, and Mrs. Frances Cousens and Mrs. Margaret Willette, both of the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission, who organized and first edited the data subsequently collected. Since a project of this nature needs considerable organizational encouragement, tribute is also due the four presidents of NAIRO under whose administrations the work progressed — Marshall Bragdon, Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati; John G. Feild, Office of U.S. Senator Philip Hart; Arnold Aronson, National Community Relations Advisory Council; and Margaret Garrity, President's Committee on Government Contracts.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE NATURE AND SCOPE OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS*

— FRANCES R. COUSENS AND JOHN G. FEILD

In Search of a History

No field of human endeavor ever arrives on the scene full blown and well defined. The emergence of social organizations concerned with those problems arising out of relations between racial, religious and ethnic groups in the United States is no exception. Unfortunately, the value of a comprehensive history of intergroup relations agencies has not yet grasped the imagination of our scholars. This is not easy to understand for it may not be too much to say that the history of the United States is the history of the intergroup relations field. With their astute awareness of the political implications of interreligious relationships, the Continental Congress, from a very broad perspective, could be called our first intergroup relations agency. Or one might point to the Federalists as another of our earliest organizations with an interest in intergroup relations. Certainly, the theory, the concepts embodied in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the first ten amendments have profoundly influenced every intergroup agency, public or private, established since their promulgation. At any rate, until a comprehensive history is available, a few sketchy observations on the origins of the field may be helpful in our review of present trends as revealed in the new NAIRO Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies with Paid Professional Personnel.

Early Origins

It seems fitting that this country's first philanthropic foundation — the Peabody Fund — should have played so vital a role in fusing the two impulses that have produced the intergroup relations field as we know it today. Following the Civil War, when it became clear that the re-structuring of racial relationships could not be consolidated or preserved without massive improvement in the economic and social welfare of the newly freed Negroes, the Peabody Fund launched a program of grants in the field of education as a private agency counterpart to the publicly sponsored Freedmen's Bureau created four years before in 1864. Thus, political freedom and private philanthropy were merged to form an organized field of professional activity that has vacillated from its earliest beginnings between a concern for individual rights and group welfare. Earlier, of course, the New England Abolitionist Societies, which sprang up in the 1850's, must also be credited among the first agencies centered on problems of race and civil rights. And, on the other flank, apart from the churches, the Indian Bureau, established in 1849, was among the earliest with a group welfare base.

From an over-all perspective, in the 50 formative years between 1865 and 1915, it is not surprising that there should be strong emphasis on the establishment of agencies geared to the problems of economic and social adjustment of particular racial, ethnic and religious groups. On the one hand, the successive waves of immigrants were bringing with them problems that differed mainly in their variant overtones of religious and ethnic differences; on the other hand, shortly after the turn of the century, the movement of Negroes from the Old South to Northern urban centers had created new dimensions, if not new problems, of Negro adjustment. The establishment of the National Urban League in 1910 was but an ideological extension of a pattern typified by the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, established in 1884. Whether looked upon as "Americanization" or "urbanization," the requirements of social and economic adjustments brought into being a great number of such agencies during this period, most of them encouraged by church sponsorship. Few among those that have continued have related their interests to the civil rights or community relations side of the field. Most, in fact, allied their interests with and helped create the social work profession.

Among those organizations established during this period that did relate the problems of group welfare to the fulfillment of individual and civil rights, four additional ones have continued and are listed in the NAIRO Directory—the Indian Rights Association (1882), the American Jewish Committee (1906), the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (1909), and the Anti-Defamation League (1913). Two other agencies established prior to 1915 are also listed: The American Ethical Society (1887), and the Jewish War Veterans (1896).

The Ambivalent Transition

By 1915, as we have said, the social work profession had emerged and the lines of professionalization in both group work and case work were fairly well laid out. Hull House, founded in 1891, under Jane Addams' leadership, had become the model of the new approach toward culture. Social science research, university based training and ultimately schools of social work became the allies of the group welfare agencies. At this juncture, we also saw the renewal of philanthropic support.' The Phelps-Stokes Fund, established in 1911, was joined by the Rosenwald Fund in 1917, both having heavy interests in Negro education and race relations. About the same time, studies sponsored by the Carnegie Corporation and the Russell Sage Foundation, created in 1907, contributed substantially to the elevation of social work standards.

The terrifying events of the post-World War I era, however, forged an increasing awareness of the relationship between group welfare and community acceptance of individual rights and group differences. The activities of the Ku Klux Klan forced into being new protective measures in the civil rights arena and brought about a renewed realization that public policy could and did determine much of the nature of intergroup relations. To enumerate the events affecting intergroup relations in the 25 transition years between 1915 and 1940 is to call a roster of new agencies. The 1917 Louisville racial zoning decision was the

The Peabody Fund, ironically, closed its books within a few months of the Plessy v. Ferguson decision.

NAACP's first major success. The 1921-1924 Quota Laws saw the establishment of the Common Council for American Unity in 1921 and the International Institute movement in 1924. In addition, the American Jewish Congress, established first in 1917 as a temporary entity to affect the minority rights provisions of the Versailles Treaty, was re-established on a permanent basis in 1922. The Scopes, Sweatt and other civil liberties trials saw the American Civil Liberties Union created in 1920. The American Association of Indian Affairs came into being two years before Indians were granted their citizenship in 1924. Changes in immigration laws regarding Orientals were connected with the origin of the Japanese American Citizens League in 1930. The Al Smith campaign led to the establishment of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1928. Concern with denial of voting rights, led U. S. Attorney General Frank Murphy to establish the Civil Rights Section in the Office of the Attorney General in 1939. Finally, the Fellowship House movement, the Catholic Interracial Council plan and the structure of the growing Jewish Community Relations Councils were all fairly well established by the end of the 1930's.

The Fateful, Fruitful Forties

The emergence in the 1940's of local, state and federal governmental agencies, triggered by President Roosevelt's Executive Order #8802 in 1941, set the stage for the explosive growth of those agencies having a primary interest in civil rights and community relations. At the same time, the Carnegie Corporation once again sponsored a series of studies that was to have as profound an influence on the development of the intergroup relations field as had been true of their earlier studies in social work.1 The Rosenwald Fund had established the American Council on Race Relations in 1944.2 At about the same time there was growing concern with standards and the need for more effective program services among the Jewish community relations agencies leading to the establishment of the National Community Relations Advisory Council in 1944. The annual reassessment conferences sponsored by this agency have achieved an important significance throughout the field. In the South, the founding of the Southern Regional Council in 1944 had been preceded by the Commission on Interracial Cooperation which came into being in 1919. In addition, the 1940's saw the creation of special departments or assignments in intergroup relations in more than 50 church groups, unions, youth agencies, and various governmental agencies.

Following World War II, the field of public education became the target of a vigorous two-pronged effort. On the one front, the Bureau of Intercultural Education (now defunct) and several other national agencies initiated efforts aimed at re-orienting public instruction methods and goals in the field of human relations. The workshop as a training method gained its greatest vogue in these teacher-training programs. Today, nearly 130 colleges and universities are involved in annual, bi-annual or special workshop programs in intergroup relations and in the past twelve years nearly 100,000 persons, most of them school teachers, have been exposed to these efforts which are heavily supported by intergroup agencies. On the other front, the culmination of a long legal effort aimed at overturning the Plessy v. Ferguson doctrine took shape in the 1940's with Supreme Court decisions involving restrictive covenants, interstate travel and higher education. Outlawing school segregation in all public schools became inevitable following these actions.

Finally, the famous 1947 Report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights projected the issues of intergroup relations well beyond the limits of group welfare. The enactment by Congress in 1957 of the first Federal Civil Rights legislation in 82 years has returned the cycle of history to a sharp focus on the re-structuring of intergroup relationships.

Trends in the Nature and Scope Today

There are 280¹ staffed agencies or departments listed in the new NAIRO Directory — 79 governmental and 201 private. These agencies employ 1406 professional workers² and maintain 548 central, regional and local offices. In addition, the Directory lists eight University Centers directly serving the intergroup relations field. Geographically, the agency services embrace 136 cities in 42 states,³ the District of Columbia, and Canada. Their combined annual budgets exceed 21 million dollars of which approximately four and a half million is from tax funds.⁴

Except for five agencies all were established after 1900. More significantly, only 37 of the listed agencies were established prior to 1940. All but two of the 79 governmental agencies have come into existence since 1943. Of the Jewish Community Relations Councils, 65 of the 80 listed were established after 1940, as is true of all 25 of the special church sponsored departments, all of the special union departments, and all 17 special assignments in youth and other agencies. In addition, 27 of the 28 local and state private community relations agencies came into being after 1940. Similarly, most of the national agencies with extensive field offices did not expand their field programs to any significant degree until after 1940. Most of the University Centers were not established until after 1950.

Of the agencies established before 1940, 14 are primarily group welfare agencies — settlement houses, aid societies, relocation agencies. An additional 26 agencies created since 1940 are centered around group welfare. Thus, only 40 agencies, or 15% of those listed, could be called group work agencies and most of these have apparently directed at least a part of their programs toward community relationships between racial, religious and ethnic groups. It might also be observed that almost 20% of the professional workers listed are identified Figures cited are approximate but reasonably accurate. Minor additions and deletions have been made in the Directory since the article was written.

This is a very careful approximation. Detailed questionnaires were available for all but a small percentage of agencies.

^{3.} States having no local offices are: Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, Vermont and Wyoming.

This is a reasonably close approximation. Questionnaires were available for most agencies. Budgets for the others were difficult to estimate.

^{5.} The Indian Bureau and the Justice Department Civil Rights Section were established prior to 1940 as previously noted. The Indian Bureau does not consider itself an intergroup relations agency and, at its own request, is not included in the Directory; the Civil Rights Section, U. S. Department of Justice, has been superseded by the Civil Rights Division.

The Alabama Council on Human Relations was founded in 1920, as part of the program of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

with group work agencies. With their relatively small population base, however, it is not likely that the newer group welfare agencies will expand as much or become as numerous as their predecessors. These would include those agencies servicing Spanish-speaking groups, Indians, Chinese, Japanese, and Southern Mountain Whites.

As already noted, the increasing number of special departments or assignments on intergroup relations that have been established by organizations or institutes having a much broader primary base is one of the significant trends of the past decade. These Departments now account for 16% of the listings and 12% of the professionals working.

While activities and services have expanded enormously in the South in recent years, it should be noted that only about 10% of all agency operations are based in the 17 Southern states now faced with school desegregation problems. On the basis of population alone, to say nothing of need, there would have to be three times as many professional workers in the South as there are to be proportionate to the rest of the nation.

The present level of expenditures in the field reveals some interesting trends. Government now accounts for about 20% of the agency funds. The amount being expended at all levels of government is likely to increase. In 1957 a bill was introduced into the Senate that would have called for an agency and personnel service program of $5 million a year for the next five years in the intergroup relations field.

Similarly, the expansion of private expenditures appears likely. The magnificent assistance which the Fund for the Republic, for example, has rendered the field represents a continuation of the historic interest which this nation's great philanthropic sponsors have had in the field of human rights and freedom.
